

Mission statement:

We seek to educate and empower youth, families, and communities to prevent teen pregnancy, strengthen connections, build healthy life skills, and improve adolescent health outcomes.

Social-emotional learning (SEL) for adolescents training

The goal of this training initiative is to help parents and youth-serving individuals to build social and emotional skills with young people, particularly young people with Individualized Education Plans (IEPs).

The training will cover:

- An overview of SEL and why it is important
- Creating a shared language to discuss SEL
- Why adolescence is a good time to support SEL
- SEL of adults who support adolescents
- How to create a learning environment conducive to SEL
- Activities to teach social and emotional skills
- Discussion of how to support diverse learners with diverse needs

Highlights

-  This training is highly interactive and utilizes activities to promote SEL
-  Highlights adolescence as a key time to support SEL
-  Target audiences for this training include; paraeducators, parents, and any adults who may interact with adolescents with IEPs
